

Dr. Marcelo Costa, DVM

Dr. Marcelo Costa is a veterinarian, professor and cattle business consultant in Brazil and Paraguay he holds a master's in business administration and a master's degree in animal reproduction.

In 1999, Dr. Costa was taught embryo transfer at Camp Cooley in Franklin, Texas and brought this information back to his family's 3rd generation ranching operation where they started Camp Cooley Brazil.

He takes a boots on the ground, profit-minded approach with all his clients and is widely recognized throughout South America, as he is responsible for the planning and advice for more than one hundred cattle ranches representing 200,000 head.

With Brazil being a screwworm endemic classified country, Dr. Costa looks forward to visiting with TSCRA members about how Brazilian cattle ranchers have effectively adapted their production practices in a country where screwworm has never been eradicated.
